Farm Telephone Costs Continue Upward
U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

The cost of telephone service to United States farmers continued to advance in 1958, according to the annual survey made by the Crop Reporting Board. The cost has increased each year since the first of these surveys in 1948.

In July 1958, farmers paid an average of $4.08 for local telephone service compared with $3.85 in 1957--an increase of 6 percent. This increase reflects in part the improved services provided farm subscribers, primarily through the expansion of dial service.

Increases of 6 to 7 percent over July 1957 were reported for most regions. Exceptions were the West South Central up 4.2 percent, and the Pacific, up 2.9. New England had the largest actual increase--up 32 cents--followed by the Mountain region which was up 29 cents. Areas showing the smallest increases were the Pacific States, up 13 cents and the West South Central region, up 17 cents over the previous year.

Regional differences in costs are, in part, the result of variation in the type and quality of service and the costs of construction.

¹⁷ The survey made in July and August requested data based on the last bill. This was generally a bill for a period ending in late June, July, or early August.

Expansion of dial service to farm subscribers continued its pace in 1957-58 with 68 percent of the farms with telephones having dial service as of July 1958. This compares with only 61 percent in 1957, an increase of 11 percent. The Mountain Region made the largest increase, percentagewise, up 19 percent.
